This year's Mobilities Aotearoa Symposium considers the theme of "Mobilities and Development: From Global to Local". We invite interdisciplinary exploration of how mobilities – encompassing the movement of people, resources, and ideas – both shape and are shaped by development processes across global and local scales. Paper submissions are encouraged to address the interplay between mobilities and critical development issues such as sustainability, poverty, (in)equality, social justice, and globalisation.

Topics may include, but are not limited to, uneven development and mobilities, mobility justice, Indigenous mobilities and knowledges, border control in the context of refugees, diaspora studies, transportation and infrastructure, digital and virtual mobilities, climate change and environmental impacts related mobilities, mobilities in the context of economic and social development, health and wellbeing, famine and food security, and urban and rural mobilities.

Submissions are invited that present work in progress or completed research on these topics, aiming to inform and inspire further studies. Contributors are also encouraged to consider how their research builds on and contributes to the existing literature, including theoretical mobilities, applied mobilities, critical mobilities studies, or Indigenous mobilities, among others.

Movement

Movement is the crossing of space by people, objects, capital, ideas and other information. It is either oriented, and therefore occurs between an origin and one or more destinations, or it is more akin to the idea of simply wandering, with no real origin or destination.

Mobility

For the Mobile Lives Forum, mobility is understood as the process of how individuals travel across distances in order to deploy through time and space the activities that make up their lifestyles. These travel practices are embedded in socio-technical systems, produced by transport and communication industries and techniques, and by normative discourses on these practices, with considerable social, environmental and spatial impacts.
