Éléonore Pigalle

Urban planner

Eleonore Pigalle is a contract researcher at the University of Nottingham. A PhD in Urban and Regional Planning since 2018, she specialises in socio-ecological transitions, analysing the impacts of public health and sustainability policies through everyday mobility and food. Her research uses techniques and theories from urban sociology, political science, geography, psychology and language sciences. She has worked in a number of universities, notably in France (Université Gustave Eiffel, Aix-Marseille Université), Switzerland (École Polytechnique Fédérale de Lausanne), Canada (Université de Montréal) and more recently in England.
