This year is the 10th anniversary of our bicycle urbanism Master Class! While we have seen impressive progress across Copenhagen remains a world leader in cycling infrastructure design, policy, and services. To celebrate these changing bicycle urbanism around the world, Copenhagenize is offering a new specialized technical course focused on infrastructure data and observation to meet the users' needs. This intensive three-day immersive course will spotlight Copenhagen's as a classroom for experiencing and learning. In a city where cycling is second nature, Copenhagen is an obvious choice for learning.

The winding streets in the historic center are one thing, but the majority of this sprawling European capital features world countless city streets in the world. It is here, like no other city in the world, where inspiration for a bicycle future is shown in infrastructure planning and design on full display, the city shows us visions of how other cities can continue moving into a scaled future.

Along with gaining a deep understanding of the ongoing transformation of Copenhagen, this new Master Class will cover aspects of bicycle infrastructure design, keeping a clear focus on a user-oriented approach and traffic safety, as well as data collection methodologies that allow cities to respond to users' needs. Join the Master Class and learn all about how to create a bicycle-friendly city, going from the macro level all the way down to the micro details.
